From the moment I arrived at Rockwater Secret Cove Resort, my itinerary was full of activities and superlative gourmet food.

The resort, about 40 minutes north of the Sechelt on the Sunshine Coast, is a playground for active people. Operating since 2005, its 13 popular tenthouse suites that overlook the ocean are booked a year in advance.

Other accommodation is available in the form of 11 rustic cabins and 14 one-and two-bedroom lodge suites, with an ocean-or pool view.

No matter which room you're in, Rockwater offers excellent hospitality in a stunning natural setting overlooking the Pacific Ocean and surrounded by towering trees.

I discovered that the Sunshine Coast is famous for its mountain biking trails, some gruelling competitive courses and others appropriate for beginners. I cycled the Big Fir Trail and enjoyed being surrounded by Douglas fir trees, some of which are 1,800 years old.

Kayaking is another favourite Sunshine Coast activity. My night paddle began at dusk. My party explored the nearby Smuggler's Cove while discreet sea lions occasionally bobbed their heads above the water, curious about us interlopers. We returned to the resort at night, guided by the string of lights that line the boardwalk connecting the tenthouse suites.

The following morning I embarked on a sailing expedition on a 14.1-metre Jeanneau sloop called the Caledonia II. Unfortunately, the still ocean waters that we so enjoyed while kayaking made for poor sailing conditions. Our amicable captain made up for the relentless calm by regaling us with salty sea yarns of sailing the seven seas and hunting for sunken treasure. When the wind picked up, we lifted sail and slowly glided back into Rockwater Cove.

To unwind from the activity, I indulged in a massage in the wall-less massage parlour, accompanied by the soothing sounds of wind rustling through trees and gentle waves lapping onto the rocky beach.

Among the highlights of my of my sojourn at Rockwater was the unwaveringly superb gastronomic experience. My favourite dish was the tomato-infused water served in a shot glass, only by a small margin, though, and that was in part due to its novelty. The fresh Pacific seafood prepared with mostly local ingredients, was equally delicious. Each dish was paired with British Columbia wines.

As a side trip, my party hopped onto a shuttle bus and travelled less than a half an hour to Sakinaw Lake for a tour of this little-known gem. The lake water reputedly gets up to 26 C in midsummer. In mid-June it was a balmy 23. As we cruised the seven-kilometre length of the lake, our guide pointed out ancient pictographs painted by the Sechelt First Nations; and he recounted the colourful history of white settlement in the area. A short hike brought us to the Agamemnon Channel, where we witnessed eagles soaring above the dramatic cliffs that rise from the ocean.

As the float plane taking me back to Vancouver flew over the rugged coastline of the Sunshine Coast, I got the eagles' perspective of my playground and I knew I'd be back to play some more.
